INSCRIBING LIFE: LIFE WRITING ACROSS CULTURES AND TIMES

Organised by the Dept of English

SACRED HEART COLLEGE Autonomous

The Dan Thottakkara National Seminar was launched by the Department of English in 2000 to keep alive the memory of the late scholar. Since its inception, the seminar has focused on frontier areas in literary studies and critical theories and has attracted scholars from all over India. This year's seminar explores Life Writing and Autobiography as an area of inquiry and discernment.

Late Rev. Dr. Daniel Thottakkara, a scholar in American Literature and Transcendental Philosophy was a member of the faculty of English at Sacred Heart College and served as Principal of the college from 1968-91. His vision has been foundational in the modernization of the college. The Dan Thottakkara Memorial National Seminar is instituted with the support of Rev. Fr. Dan's family.

The Department of English cordially invites you to the two day seminar and calls for your creative contributions in the form of scholarly papers and discussions to enliven the sessions.

Prof. Dr. C. S. Francis
Head of the Department of English, Sacred Heart College.

Inscribing Life: Life Writing across Cultures and Times

Gertrude Stein's remark, that Anything is an autobiography points to the self-revelatory nature of any species of art. Through extrapolation one may argue that any human endeavor is also one of self inscription. The term 'life writing' attains significance when it comes to denote that body of work whose primary motivation is to inscribe life. Life writing is the reflection of our efforts to capture transient lived experience in more permanent (literary and extra-literary) forms.

The wide ambit of life writing includes biography, autobiography, memoirs, documentaries, blogs and posts on social media. These have likewise inspired a wide variety of critical responses. Though having a long tradition of engagement with life writing, critical discourse on life writing was institutionalized in 1970s. In his essay 'Autobiography as De-facement', Paul de Man famously concludes that "the distinction between fiction and autobiography is not an either/or polarity but...finally undecidable". Poststructuralism went so far as to auger the end of autobiography as it transitioned into "fictions of the self" (Michael Sprinkler).

In its encounter with feminism, life writing (women's autobiography in particular) has been examined as site for negotiation between women's self representation and their historical representations as idealized and/or invisible. Postcolonial fiction has drawn upon the techniques of autobiography in such works as Salman Rushdie's Midnight's Children (being the autobiography of Saleem Sinai), Toni Morrison's Beloved and J.M. Coetzee's Foe. Complementing these are autobiographical texts with postcolonial discourse at their core such as Sara Suleri's Meatless Days, Bell Hooks' Bone Black: Memories of Girlhood and Henry Louis Gates Jrs Colored People: A Memoir.

As we approach the third decade of the twenty first century, Life Writing seems to be gaining ground over traditional fictional narratives. The Nobel Laureate in Literature for 2015, Svetlana Alexievich, is a life writer whose "polyphonic writings" chronicle disasters such as Chernobyl. Other recent work in Life Writing presents such diverse concerns as trauma narratives on the Holocaust, illness narratives and memoirs about ageing or death of loved ones. That Life Writing is in the prime of its life is beyond doubt. This seminar is an attempt to contemplate works which, according to James Olney, comprise the "symbiotic matter of memory and narrative".

We invite scholarly papers for presentation on (but not limited to) topics such as:

- Historical accounts of Life Writing
- Life writing as history
- Life writing and Digital spaces
- Autobiografiction – fictional life writing
- Pathobiography - Disease narratives
- Age and Life writing
  - Motherhood
  - Old Age
- Children's life writing
- Letters and Correspondence as Life writing
- Life writing and War
  - War poems, narratives on life writing
- Religion and Life writing
  - Biography/Autobiographies of religious figures
- Celebrity Auto/biographies
- Collaborative Life Writing.
