Foreword

English in Practice 3 is an ELT course book for the undergraduate students of Saurashtra University, Gujarat.

The book is divided into four modules: Reading, Vocabulary, Grammar and Composition. The book aims to equip learners with the required language and communication skills for academic purposes and successful professional careers. The book introduces students to a variety of texts with the common theme of 'commerce' running across the chapters. Adopting a holistic approach towards the learning and teaching of English, the book combines literary explorations with grammar, vocabulary and composition tasks, and thereby helps students achieve a high degree of proficiency in English.

We hope teachers and students will benefit from this course and the book will be widely appreciated, just like its predecessors.

Acknowledgements

The authors and publishers are grateful to the following for permission to use copyright material:

Harvard Business Review for the essay 'Being Persuasive Across Cultural Divides' by Steve Martin
