Media incubator commenced by UNICEF at SH College

SH College and UNICEF India developed an incubation Centre based on audio visual, print and new media interfaces and specifically designed to enhance awareness on Gender, Health and Wellness among children and youth across Kerala. This project created, influenced and develop awareness regarding health and related issues, which affected children in contemporary Kerala. To achieve this, the project employed graduates from Sacred Heart School of Communication, Sacred Heart College and mobilized strategies, based on data provided by UNICEF India, as well as generated its own pool of content.

Genderally Speaking

The outreach programme of SHSC, Genderally Speaking on Gender Justice and sensitization of Sexuality was launched on 2 October 2016 by Honourable Cochin Mayor, Soumini Jain by revealing the logo and Poster campaign on social media platforms.

Genderally Speaking planned a series of events that included developing a Life Skills course, distribution of biodegradable sanitary napkins, performance by female folk artists and open dialogue on gender issues and sensitisation in social media platforms. The students of SHSC also produced video content for multiple social media platforms. The digital documentation of women in folk art in association with the folklore academy was also done which pulled healthy crowd of people from neighbourhood community, family and friends. The campaign successfully associated with Cochin Corporation, Kochi- Muziris Biennale, Kerala Folk lore Academi, Kudumbasree and NGO CodeRed.

The Campaign Poster for sponsoring one girl's sanitary hygiene for a year drove huge public support.

BOOSTING GENDER KNOWLEDGE

'Generally Speaking' aims to create a deeper understanding about gender among students

DC CORRESPONDENT

These days, we could find a lot of organisations that stand for a particular gender. All these initiatives aim to recognise and address gender issues prevalent in society. 'Generally Speaking', a six-month long national gender congress envisioned by the Media Studies Dept of SH School of Communication, Thevara, provides a larger platform for all to get a deeper understanding of the situation and to generate meaningful discourses on the same through an array of activities.

The gender congress was inaugurated by Mayor Soumini Jain on Sunday. As a first step, they organised a workshop on menstrual hygiene and initiated a free year-long supply of biodegradable sanitary napkins to underprivileged women in Illithode village in collaboration with the NGO CodeRed.

Like other platforms, 'Generally Speaking' is not meant for one gender. "It is a space for all," says Rima, a teacher. "We are planning a wide range of activities as part of it. First, we have included a Life Skills Course in our curriculum. There will be workshops on various topics. We have opened accounts on social media to generate healthy discussions. Our students will produce films and share them on YouTube. The Instagram account 'Generally Clicking' is a place to share pictures that speak about gender. We are also doing a digital documentation on 'women in folk art' in association with the folklore academy. At the end, there will be a week-long film festival," she adds. The project is done in association with UNICEF India, Ernakulam District Administration, Cochin Corporation, Kochi Muziris Biennale, and Kerala Folklore Akademi. The activities will go on until March 8, 2017.

Workshop on Menstrual Hygiene - Illithode Panchayat

As the first step towards Generally Speaking a Worksoop and free one-year long distribution of Kudumbasree's biodegradable sanitary napkins to the women community of Illithodu Panchayath was held with association with NGO CodeRed.

'Genderally Speaking', a conclave conducted by SH School of Communication, Thevara, addresses issues relating to women's health and empowerment

ANASUYA MENON

In October this year, over 100 girls from Illithode panchayat, Malayattoor, were given free sanitary pads. Until then, they had little or no knowledge about them. The number of women who have access to sanitary napkins in India is still small, even in a State such as Kerala, which ranks high on the human development index.

An informal research conducted by the students of the S.H. School of Communication, Sacred Heart College, Thevara, found that awareness was low even in semi-rural areas. So, they zeroed in on Illithode, roughly 60 km from Ernakulam.

A gender conclave being conducted by the S.H. School of Communication has women's health and hygiene at its core. The events planned for the conclave focus on the theme "a healthy woman, a healthier world." The idea is to have a sustained campaign aimed at women's empowerment. "Women's issues still don't get the importance they deserve and we need to start somewhere. We need to initiate a dialogue on women's issues," says P. R. Arun, guest faculty and project lead.

As a first step, the student representatives made visits to the panchayat, speaking to the members and the schools. "We interacted with the parents of adolescent girls about their menstrual health and hygiene. Many of them were using cloth and had felt discomfort while in school," says Anna Priyanka, one of the students who is part of the project. "We conducted demonstrations and explained to the girls and mothers how they had to be used. We also addressed their safety concerns," she adds.

for the purpose. "The napkins have lesser plastic content in them and are thereby safer," says Joseph Vincent, a student representative. The plan is to provide each girl a year-long supply of sanitary pads. "We have already reached out to 200 girls in two phases," Joseph says. While the funds for the first phase were raised by the students and the faculty themselves, for the second phase, they received contributions from companies and institutions in and around Ernakulam.

By donating Rs. 500 the sanitary needs of a girl for a year can be met, the students say. The initiative could encourage more sponsors to come forward, they feel. Not just companies and corporates, individuals can contribute too.

"Ambitious as it may seem considering our limited resources, we wish to continue our efforts by reaching out to Government schools and juvenile homes as well. Installing sanitary napkin vending machines in Government schools will go a long way in ensuring menstrual health among adolescent girls," says Joseph.

As part of the campaign, the student volunteers will also organise awareness workshops and classes on women's health and hygiene. They are also looking at identifying other villages and rural areas where the project could be implemented, says Arun. "We are also reaching out to the women in the fisher folk community in Thevara, educating them about the use of sanitary napkins," he adds. The initial idea was to distribute menstrual cups, as they are environment-friendly and effective as well. But considering the fact that so many taboos persist around menstruation even today, it would be difficult to execute. There are villages in the country where even napkins are unheard of," Arun says.

"Genderally Speaking", as the conclave has been named, also goes beyond the scope of women's issues to facilitate larger gender inclusivity acknowledging the problems faced by the third gender, for instance. Performances and film festivals too will be organised as part of the conclave. A mudiyettu performance by a woman was held to underline the importance of women in folklore. "The idea is to set an example and inspire more people to take gender issues seriously," Arun says.

The conclave ends in March, 2017.

Folk Fest by Genderally Speaking

Mudiyettu was performed by Bindu Narayana Marar. The programme was inaugurated by Actress Rima Kallingal it was open to public and academic community.

There is confidence in her voice as she speaks about her maiden Mudi yettu performance that took place at Sacred Heart College, Thevara, Kochi. It was a historic moment, as in Mudi yettu, the traditional folk dance drama that enacts the mythological tale of the battle between Goddess Kali and demon Darika, women do not dress up and perform as Kali. But then Bindu Narayana Marar, who hails from Piravom, boldly took that step. It was a prestigious moment for her to wear the headgear of the Kali.

"I don't know why women stayed away from this so far. The artiste should observe lent prior to the performance. He/she should abstain from having liquor and non-vegetarian food," says Bindu. All these were not obstacles for her. "I don't drink and I am a pure vegetarian. Also, I believe that the purity

Mudiyyette by Bindu Narayana Marar

Let us
start to speak
'genderally'

Deepika Jayaram
@timesgroup.com

When artiste Bindu Narayana Marar performed Mudiyyette at the programme titled Genderally Speaking, organised by the students of SH School of Communication, it was actually a historical event. The reason? Bindu's recital is reportedly the first attempt by any woman to perform Mudiyyette, which is taboo for women owing to the issue of menstruation.

PR Arun, project head of the programme and a playwright, explains, "Only men have been allowed traditionally to perform and enact the role of Goddess Kali, from time immemorial. Even in 2016, a woman is not allowed to perform on stage because of an natural phenomenon like menstruation. Fighting such taboos should be lauded."

The fact that not only young girls, but boys too are coming out in solidarity with them and talking about menstruation was refreshing. Hamsa MM, a third year student of Animation, says, "Women have been conditioned and suppressed for a long time thus taking a stand for oneself becomes all the more relevant today."

Ubitha K, another student, who also designed the logo, says, "The highlight of the event is that the participants are not restricted to women. The fact that constructive work has already been started will prompt many more to join the bandwagon."

Arun points out that there are few women in folklore, and also they have been poorly documented. Thus it is also an attempt to capture their lives and struggles through the performances. Around nine such events have been mooted by the students, which will be completed by January next year. The studies made on tracking women's participation in folklore would be later submitted to The Kerala Folklore Academy.

The group has already working on two of the projects already, which include adopting villages and panchayats and providing free bio-degradable sanitary napkins to the underprivileged, in collaboration with the UNICEF.

The sanitary pads distributed to around 100 women in the Illithod area have been made by women from Kudumbasree. "It all comes a full circle as it comes from women to women," says Arun.

In the pipeline is a project for voicing their opinions on topics such as hygiene and gender issues on the radio, involving around 100 schools.

Genderally Speaking, which also includes an International film fest on the same topic, will kickstart all its events by January 14 next year.

Students Aagiya Joji, who also designed the logo and Joseph Vincent, who have been part of socially involved programmes, conclude that Genderally Speaking aims at playing a key role in addressing women of the lower strata and empowerment would be the first on their agenda.

Actress Rima Kallingal inaugurated the event at SH College.

Youngsters in pink rock the dance floor to promote breast cancer awareness Youngsters in the city got into a grooving mood recently at the Sacred Heart College. But the event, where all were dressed in pink, wasn't just a calorie burning activity. Titled 'Party in Pink', it brought together zumba trainers from across the city for an hour-and-a-half long dance session, as part of breast cancer awareness month.

The dancers put their best foot forward, literally, to songs like They don't really care about us, Galla gooriyan, Cheap thrills and Malhari without a care for the world. The energy levels went up when the dancers stepped down from the dias and danced along with the audience.

Ann Oommen, a student from the college who attended the event, says, "We came here thinking that it would be just another programme. However, there was a serious purpose behind it. It was an enriching experience, as we left the venue with a lot of insights about breast cancer." She adds, "It was more effective than a lecture."

For Chandni Babu and her friends from the college, it was an opportunity to brush up their dancing skills. She says, "The dancers were doing it in such way that everyone could quickly grasp what they were performing. We are glad that we got an opportunity to know more about zumba and fitness."

The speech by Dr Thomas Varghese gave them more information about why fitness is important and how breast cancer is something spotted even among men. He also stressed that one must ensure not to binge eat and focus on their food intake.

Chandni adds, "We learnt about the importance of exercise and how prevention is always better than cure."

Leena Viswambharan, a dance instructor concludes that the speech by the doctor was indeed an eye opener. "We should spread the message that breast cancer is completely curable, if detected at an early stage."
